IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

RESOLUTION

Concerning the extradition to the United States of Salvadorans.

Whereas 24 Salvadorans who have been accused of murder in the District of Columbia have fled to El Salvador to avoid prosecution in the United States;

Whereas these 24 individuals represent approximately two-thirds of the outstanding homicide warrants in the District of Columbia;

Whereas other jurisdictions, such as Arlington, Virginia, seek Salvadorans who have fled to El Salvador for serious crimes, including homicide;

Whereas since 1911, El Salvador has maintained a treaty with the United States that provides for the extradition of suspects charged with certain criminal offenses;

Whereas the United States-El Salvador extradition treaty does not compel the extradition of either nation's citizens;

Whereas the United States has no constitutional prohibition against extraditing its own citizens;

Whereas El Salvador's constitution prohibits the extradition of Salvadoran citizens;

Whereas the El Salvadoran legislature, in April 1997, voted to amend its constitution to allow extradition of its citizens;

Whereas the constitutional amendment permitting extradition of Salvadoran nationals requires approval by two-thirds of El Salvador's unicameral legislature in a second vote before it can be enacted; and

Whereas the vast majority of Salvadoran immigrants to the United States have contributed much to the communities in which they live: Now, therefore, be it
