RESOLUTION

Expressing the sense of the House of Representatives with respect to youth violence.

Whereas teenagers from throughout the United States gathered in Washington, D.C., on October 19 and 20, 1999, to participate in the Voices Against Violence teen conference;

Whereas the participation of youth in the conference indicates that youth violence is of great concern to the Nation's youth;

Whereas youth today are growing up in a more violent society and need positive role models and strong community and political leaders who will denounce violence and promote policies that seek to reduce youth exposure to violence;

Whereas young people possess the knowledge and resources necessary to help identify and reduce juvenile violence;

Whereas youth violence is not isolated to a single community, but impacts every segment of the Nation's population;

Whereas listening to the voices of the Nation's youth is critical to our national effort to identify the causes of and reduce the instances of youth violence;

Whereas the youth who participated in the conference believe that the primary causes of youth violence are—

- (1) parents' lack of positive parenting skills;
- (2) discrimination and intolerance towards others;

and

- (3) lack of social and emotional skills, community morals, and self-esteem;

Whereas the youth who participated in the conference believe that the greatest needs in America for reducing youth violence are—

- (1) positive after-school programming, including the arts;
- (2) more mentoring and open communication; and
- (3) character education; and

Whereas the youth who participated in the conference believe that some of the most effective ways to decrease the level of youth violence in our schools and communities include—

- (1) increasing the number of youth programs (teen centers, job training, and conflict resolution);
- (2) increasing the support for peer mentoring and youth-adult mentoring; and
- (3) restricting access to weapons: Now, therefore, be it
