CONCURRENT RESOLUTION

Recognizing the historical significance of the Triangle Fire and honoring its victims on the occasion of the 90th anniversary of the tragic event.

Whereas on March 25, 1911, a fire, commonly referred to as the Triangle Fire, broke out at the Triangle Shirtwaist Company factory, located on the top floors of the Asch Building on the corner of Greene Street and Washington Place in New York City;

Whereas the fire swept through the top 3 stories of the building in only ½ hour;

Whereas 146 of the 600 Triangle factory employees died in the tragic fire;

Whereas many of the Triangle factory workers were women, some as young as 15 years old;

Whereas most of the workers were recent European Jewish or Italian immigrants who had come to the United States with their families to seek a better life;

Whereas fire inspections and precautions at the time were woefully inadequate;

Whereas the Triangle factory had never conducted a fire drill and had locked doors, poor sanitation, and crowding;

Whereas in the wake of this tragedy, people throughout the Nation demanded restitution, justice, and action that would safeguard the vulnerable and oppressed, and there were massive protests by people angry at the lack of concern and the greed that had made the Triangle fire possible;

Whereas during the next 20 years, there was a substantial effort to alleviate the most dangerous aspects of sweatshop manufacturing in New York and throughout the Nation;

Whereas the labor movement and progressive organizations fought a long and difficult battle to secure the right of workers to safe, decent working conditions;

Whereas the last survivor of the factory blaze, Rose Freedman, passed away on February 17, 2001, at the age of 107;

Whereas although the public outrage resulting from the Triangle Fire eventually faded, the fire was not forgotten nor was it the only such event in the history of American workers; and

Whereas the Triangle Fire brought attention to the many serious problems facing factory workers and paved the way for worker protection laws: Now, therefore, be it
