The Congress finds as follows:

- (2) The National Gambling Impact Study Commission in 1999 recommended the passage of legislation to prohibit wire transfers to Internet gambling sites or the banks which represent them.
- (3) Internet gambling is a major cause of debt collection problems for insured depository institutions and the consumer credit industry.
- (4) Internet gambling conducted through offshore jurisdictions has been identified by United States law enforcement officials as a significant money laundering vulnerability.

SEC. 3. PROHIBITION ON ACCEPTANCE OF ANY BANK INSTRUMENT FOR UNLAWFUL INTERNET GAMBLING.

“(2) Paying, transferring, or collecting on any check, draft, or other instrument drawn on any depository institution with the actual knowledge that any person is violating section 3(a) of the Unlawful Internet Gambling Funding Prohibition Act in connection with such check, draft, or other instrument.”.

SEC. 4. INTERNET GAMBLING IN OR THROUGH FOREIGN JURISDICTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In deliberations between the United States Government and any other country on money laundering, corruption, and crime issues, the United States Government should—

(1) encourage cooperation by foreign governments and relevant international fora in identifying whether Internet gambling operations are being used for money laundering, corruption, or other crimes;

(2) advance policies that promote the cooperation of foreign governments, through information sharing or other measures, in the enforcement of this Act; and

(3) encourage the Financial Action Task Force on Money Laundering, in its annual report on money laundering typologies, to study the extent to which Internet gambling operations are being used for money laundering.

(b) REPORT REQUIRED.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall submit an annual report to the Congress on the deliberations between the United States and other countries on issues relating to Internet gambling.

PURPOSE AND SUMMARY

H.R. 556 prohibits the acceptance of any bank instrument for unlawful Internet gambling. It defines certain terms for purposes of the Act; establishes civil remedies, criminal penalties, and regulatory enforcement authorities; encourages cooperation by foreign governments in the enforcement of the Act; and requires the Secretary of the Treasury to report annually to Congress on deliberations between the United States and other countries on issues relating to Internet gambling. Its primary purpose is to give U.S. law enforcement a new, more effective tool for combating offshore Internet gambling sites that illegally extend their services to U.S. residents via the Internet.

BACKGROUND AND NEED FOR LEGISLATION

The Committee has established a comprehensive hearing and markup record on Internet gambling. In addition to the extensive debate at the Committee’s October 11, 2001 markup of H.R. 3004, the Financial Anti-Terrorism Act of 2001, Internet gambling was addressed at the Committee’s October 3, 2001 hearing on terrorism and money laundering. At that hearing, the FBI, the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice, and a money laundering expert testified that Internet gambling serves as a vehicle for money laundering and can be exploited by terrorists for that purpose. The FBI also testified about pending litigation linking organized crime to money laundering and Internet gambling.

At two hearings held in July by the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations and the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions and Consumer Credit, witnesses discussed the legal status of Internet gambling, the social and financial challenges it poses, and legislative options for addressing those challenges.

Many legal experts, including officials from the Department of Justice, State attorneys general, and others involved in law enforcement, hold the view that Internet gambling is generally prohibited under various Federal statutes. Among them, the Federal Wire Act (title 18, United States Code, section 1084) criminalizes the knowing use of a wire communication facility by a gambling establishment for the transmission of bets or wagers in interstate or foreign commerce.

Conventional forms of gambling activities, such as casino wagering, State lotteries, slot machines, and horseracing, legal in many jurisdictions, are regulated by the individual States. However, these activities are subject to intense scrutiny and a myriad of licensing and other operational requirements. Virtually all States prohibit the operation of gambling businesses not expressly permitted by their respective constitutions or special legislation. Internet gambling fell into the category of illegal gambling activity in all fifty States until June of 2001 when the Nevada legislature authorized the Nevada gaming commission to legalize on-line, Internet gambling operations if and when such operations can be conducted in compliance with Federal law.

Because Internet gambling is generally held to be illegal under Federal and State law, most of the estimated 1,500 Internet gambling sites today operate from offshore locations in the Caribbean and elsewhere. As such, they operate effectively beyond the reach of U.S. regulators and law enforcement, as well as the statutory anti-money laundering regimes that apply to U.S.-based casinos. These “virtual casinos” advertise the ease of opening betting accounts mainly through the use of credit cards. Internet gambling sites are not only vulnerable to criminal exploitation by money launderers, they can also easily abuse a customer’s credit card information or manipulate the odds of a particular wager to the casino’s advantage.

At the Oversight Subcommittee’s hearing on July 12, the American Gaming Association—representing commercial casinos and their suppliers in the United States—addressed some of the practical problems associated with Internet gambling, including the difficulty of subjecting Internet operations to the kinds of regulation currently applied to U.S.-based casinos. According to the AGA, its major concern is that offshore Internet gambling sites “frustrate important state policies, including restrictions on the availability of gaming within each state.” The AGA went on to say: “* * * unregulated Internet gambling that exists today allows an unlicensed, untaxed, unsupervised operator to engage in wagering that is otherwise subject to stringent federal and state regulatory controls. These controls are vital to preserving the honesty, integrity and fairness that those in the gaming industry today have worked so hard for so long to bring about.” The AGA further reported that it does not believe the technology for exercising such controls with respect to Internet gambling is yet available.

Testifying from a State perspective, the New Jersey Director of Gaming Enforcement also noted that offshore Internet gambling operations provide no tax revenue or jobs to States, unlike State-regulated casinos.

In addition to the legal and economic challenges cited above, problem gambling—including problem Internet gambling—can lead to personal and family hardships, such as lost savings, excessive debt, bankruptcy, foreclosed mortgages, and divorce. In particular, Internet gambling is proving to be a serious problem for many college students. Testimony from the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) at the July hearings underscored the vulnerability of young people to losing large sums through Internet gambling. According to a Nellie Mae survey cited by the NCAA, 78 percent of college students have credit cards, nearly a third have four or more credit cards, and one in ten will graduate with balances over $7,000. One student reportedly lost $10,000 on Internet sports gambling over a three-month period. And, in another case, a student reportedly lost $5,000 on a single Internet wager on the Super Bowl and was forced to drop out of school. The New Jersey Director of Gaming Enforcement also testified that the State of New Jersey has filed a suit against certain offshore casinos found to be taking online bets from minors in that State. Witnesses from the National Council on Problem Gambling and the Compulsive Gambling Center testified about the problems associated with compulsive or pathological gambling, and the Christian Coalition, in a letter to a Member of the Committee, echoed concerns about the impact of gambling on families and society and, in particular, the impact of Internet gambling on the poor, youth, and those who are already compulsive gamblers.

Because of the pervasive legal, economic, and social challenges posed by the rapid growth of Internet gambling, the National Gambling Impact Study Commission unanimously recommended in its 1999 final report that the Federal government prohibit, with no new exemptions, all Internet gambling not already authorized by law. The Commission also recommended that legislation be adopted to prohibit wire transfers to Internet gambling sites or to the banks which represent them, and called on the government to develop enforcement strategies that include credit card providers and money transfer agencies that facilitate Internet gambling.

H.R. 556, the Unlawful Internet Gambling Funding Prohibition Act, builds on the recommendations of the National Gambling Impact Study Commission by prohibiting gambling businesses from accepting credit cards or other bank instruments in connection with unlawful Internet gambling. Because of the anticipated difficulty in enforcing this prohibition offshore, the legislation also authorizes the Attorney General (or appropriate State officials) to seek an injunction against any person to prevent or restrain a violation of this bill, including to prohibit banks and other financial service providers from processing any credit card transaction or other financial instrument with a specified illegal Internet gambling site. The bill is similar to provisions incorporated in the Committee-reported version of H.R. 3004, the Financial Anti-Terrorism Act of 2001, as well as to legislation adopted by the House Banking Committee in the last Congress (H.R. 4419).

H.R. 556, as amended, is not intended to impose new burdens on financial institutions to identify which offshore gambling sites may be engaged in unlawful activities. Rather, the legislation contemplates a mechanism whereby banks and other financial service providers will be provided, pursuant to an injunction, with the names of specific Internet gambling operations to which payments are to be prohibited. The obligation of financial institutions pursuant to such an injunction would be similar, in effect, to their obligations under certain other U.S. laws, such as those administered by the Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC) barring financial transactions with terrorists and drug kingpins.

Washington, DC, November 13, 2001.

H.R. 556—Unlawful Internet Gambling Funding Prohibition Act

Summary: H.R. 556 would prohibit gambling businesses from accepting credit cards, checks or other bank instruments from gamblers who illegally bet over the Internet. The bill also would authorize the agencies that regulate insured depository institutions to issue cease-and-desist orders against institutions that knowingly facilitate Internet gambling. The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC), the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), the Office of Thrift Supervision (OTS), and the National Credit Union Administration (NUCA) would enforce the provisions of H.R. 556 as they apply to financial institutions.

CBO estimates that implementing this legislation would result in no significant cost to the federal government. Because enactment of H.R. 556 could affect direct spending and receipts, pay-as-you-go procedures would apply to the bill. However, CBO estimates that any impact on direct spending and receipts would not be significant.

Although H.R. 556 would prohibit gambling businesses from accepting credit card payments and other bank instruments from gamblers who bet illegally over the Internet, the bill would not create a new intergovernmental or private-sector mandate. Under current federal and state law, gambling businesses are generally prohibited from accepting bets or wagers over the Internet. Thus, H.R. 556 does not contain a new mandate relative to current law, and would impose no costs on state, local, or tribal governments.

Estimated cost to the Federal Government: CBO estimates that the government would incur no significant costs under H.R. 556. CBO estimates that implementing H.R. 556 would increase administrative costs of the Department of Justice, but any such costs would be negligible. The bill also would have a small effect on the operating costs of the FDIC and the Federal Reserve System. Finally, the bill would have a negligible effect on the collection and spending of criminal penalties.

Basis of estimate: The bill would have only minor budgetary effects, as described below.

Spending subject to appropriation

Because H.R. 556 would establish a new federal crime relating to Internet gambling, the federal government would be able to pursue cases that it otherwise would not be able to prosecute. CBO expects, however, that most cases would be pursued under existing state laws. Therefore, we estimate that any increase in federal costs for law enforcement, court proceedings, or prison operations would not be significant. Any such additional costs would be subject to the availability of appropriated funds.

H.R. 556 would require the Department of Justice to submit an annual report on deliberations with other countries on issues related to Internet gambling. CBO estimates that preparing and completing the report would cost less than $100,000 a year, subject to the availability of appropriated funds.

Direct spending and revenues

The NCUA, the OTS, and the OCC charge fees to cover all their administrative costs; therefore, any additional spending by these agencies to implement the bill would have no net budgetary effect. That is not the case with the FDIC, however, which uses deposit insurance premiums paid by all banks to cover the expenses it incurs to supervise state-chartered banks.

The bill would cause a small increase in FDIC spending, but would not affect its premium income. In total, CBO estimates that H.R. 556 would increase direct spending and offsetting receipts of the NCUA, OTS, OCC, and FCC by less than $500,000 a year over the 2002–2006 period.

Budgetary effects on the Federal Reserve are recorded as changes in revenues (governmental receipts). Based on information from the Federal Reserve, CBO estimates that enacting H.R. 556 would reduce such revenues by less than $500,000 a year over the 2002–2006 period.

Because those prosecuted and convicted under the bill could be subject to criminal fines, the federal government might collect additional fines if the bill is enacted. Collections of such fines are recorded in the budget as governmental receipts (i.e., revenues), which are deposited in the Crime Victims Fund and spent in subsequent years. Any additional collections are likely to be negligible because of the small number of cases involved. Because any increase in direct spending would equal the amount of fines collected (with a lag of one year or more), the additional direct spending also would be negligible.

Pay-as-you-go considerations: The Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act sets up pay-as-you-go procedures for legislation affecting direct spending or receipts. Enacting H.R. 556 could affect both direct spending and receipts, but CBO estimates that any such effects would be negligible.

Intergovernmental and private-sector impact: Although H.R. 556 would prohibit gambling businesses from accepting credit card payments and other bank instruments from gamblers who bet illegally over the Internet, the bill would not create a new intergovernmental mandate. Under current federal and state law, gambling businesses are generally prohibited from accepting bets or wages over the Internet. Thus, H.R. 556 does not contain a new mandate relative to current law.

Estimate prepared by: Federal Spending: Mark Hadley and Lanette J. Walker. Federal Revenues: Carolyn Lynch. Impact on State, Local, and Tribal Governments: Susan Sieg Tompkins. Impact on the Private Sector: Jean Talarico.

Estimate approved by: Peter H. Fontaine, Deputy Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

FEDERAL MANDATES STATEMENT

The Committee adopts as its own the estimate of Federal mandates prepared by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office pursuant to section 423 of the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE STATEMENT

No advisory committees within the meaning of section 5(b) of the Federal Advisory Committee Act were created by this legislation.

CONSTITUTIONAL AUTHORITY STATEMENT

Pursuant to clause 3(d)(1) of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee finds that the Constitutional Authority of Congress to enact this legislation is provided by Article 1, section 8, clause 1 (relating to the general welfare of the United States) and clause 3 (relating to the power to regulate interstate commerce).

APPLICABILITY TO LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

The Committee finds that the legislation does not relate to the terms and conditions of employment or access to public services or accommodations within the meaning of section 102(b)(3) of the Congressional Accountability Act.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE LEGISLATION

Section 1. Short title

This section provides the short title of the bill, the “Unlawful Internet Gambling Funding Prohibition Act.”

Section 2. Findings

This section provides findings which note that: (1) Internet gambling is primarily funded through the personal use of banking instruments and plays a large role in the creation of ultimately uncollectible personal debt; and (2) Internet gambling is susceptible to abuse by money launderers.

Section 3. Prohibition on acceptance of any bank instrument for unlawful Internet gambling

Subsection (a) prohibits a gambling business from accepting bank instruments in connection with unlawful Internet gambling. Covered instruments include credit cards, electronic fund transfers, and checks.

Subsection (b) defines the term “bets or wagers” as the staking or risking by any person of something of value upon the outcome of a contest of others, a sporting event, or a game predominantly subject to chance with the agreement that the winner will receive something of greater value than the amount staked or risked. Excluded from that definition is a bona fide business transaction governed by the securities laws; a transaction subject to the Commodity Exchange Act; an over-the-counter derivative instrument; any other transaction exempt from State gaming or bucket shop laws pursuant to the Commodity Exchange Act or Securities Exchange Act; a contract of indemnity or guarantee; a contract for insurance; a deposit with a depository institution; certain participation in a simulation sports game or education game; or a transaction authorized under State law with a business licensed or authorized by a State.

This subsection also defines the term “business of betting or wagering” and excludes from that definition a credit card issuer, an insured depository institution, various other financial service providers, an interactive computer service and a telecommunications service, except as provided by subsection (e).

Another term defined in subsection (b) is “unlawful Internet gambling” which means to place, receive, or otherwise transmit a bet or wager by any means which involves the use of the Internet where the bet or wager is illegal under Federal or State law in the State where the bet or wager is initiated, received, or otherwise made. This subsection does not seek to redefine what is lawful or unlawful Internet gambling and is not intended to supersede existing State or Federal law, or to effect any change in current law related to tribal compacts pursuant to the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act, in terms of its definitions and coverage.

Subsection (c) authorizes civil remedies, including the issuance of a preliminary injunction or injunction by a U.S. District Court—at the request of the Attorney General or certain State officials—against any person to prevent or restrain a violation of this legislation. Injunctions issued in connection with alleged violations of this bill on Indian lands are to be enforced in accordance with the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act and any applicable Tribal-State compact. The subsection also requires the Attorney General or State official to notify the appropriate Federal bank agency before seeking an injunction against an insured depository institution in order to allow the bank agency time to issue its own order under the Federal Deposit Insurance Act. Subsection (c) also limits the availability of the broad injunctive relief otherwise available under this subsection with respect to interactive computer services, as defined in section 230(f) of title 47.

Subsection (d) authorizes criminal penalties for a violation of subsection 3(a), including fines under title 18 or imprisonment for not more than five years or both. It also authorizes the issuance of a permanent injunction against any person convicted of a violation under subsection (a).

Subsection (e) provides that certain financial service entities, interactive computer services, or telecommunications services may—despite their general exclusion from the definition of a business of betting or wagering—be liable for a violation of subsection (a) if they have actual knowledge and control of bets and wagers and they operate, own, or supervise (or are operated, owned, or supervised by) an Internet site engaged in illegal gambling. The purpose of this subsection, when read in conjunction with the exception to the definition of “business of betting or wagering” in subsection (b), is to ensure that a financial intermediary, interactive computer service or telecommunications service is not held liable for a violation of this bill based solely on its unknowing and unintentional involvement in an unlawful Internet gambling transaction.

Subsection (f) provides that a Federal banking agency may take appropriate enforcement action against any financial institution that knowingly permits its payment or credit facilities to be used in connection with Internet gambling activity that violates this bill.

Section 4. Internet gambling in or through foreign jurisdictions

Section 4 provides that, in deliberations between the U.S. Government and any other country on money laundering, corruption, and crime issues, the U.S. Government should encourage cooperation by foreign governments and international fora in identifying whether Internet gambling operations are being used for money laundering, corruption, or other crimes, advance policies that promote cooperation by foreign governments in enforcing this bill, and encourage the Financial Action Task Force on Money Laundering (FATF) to study the extent to which Internet gambling operations are being used for money laundering. It also requires the Secretary of the Treasury to submit an annual report to Congress on the deliberations between the United States and other countries on issues relating to Internet gambling.

CHANGES IN EXISTING LAW MADE BY THE BILL, AS REPORTED

In compliance with clause 3(e) of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives, changes in existing law made by the bill, as reported, are shown as follows (new matter is printed in italic and existing law in which no change is proposed is shown in roman):

DISSENTING VIEWS

H.R. 556, which limits the ability of individual citizens to use bank instruments, including credit cards or checks, to finance Internet gambling should be rejected by Congress since the Federal Government has no constitutional authority to ban or even discourage any form of gambling.

In addition to being unconstitutional, H.R. 556 is likely to prove ineffective at ending Internet gambling. Instead, this bill will ensure that gambling is controlled by organized crime. History, from the failed experiment of prohibition to today's futile "war on drugs," shows that the government cannot eliminate demand for something like Internet gambling simply by passing a law. Instead, H.R. 556 will force those who wish to gamble over the Internet to patronize suppliers willing to flaunt the ban. In many cases, providers of services banned by the government will be members of criminal organizations. Even if organized crime does not operate Internet gambling enterprises their competitors are likely to be controlled by organized crime. After all, since the owners and patrons of Internet gambling cannot rely on the police and courts to enforce contracts and resolve other disputes they will be forced to rely on members of organized crime to perform those functions. Thus, the profits of Internet gambling will flow into organized crime.

Furthermore, outlawing an activity will raise the price vendors are able to charge consumers, thus increasing the profits flowing to organized crime from Internet gambling. It is bitterly ironic that a bill masquerading as an attack on crime will actually increase organized crime's ability to control and profit from Internet gambling!

In conclusion, H.R. 556 violates the constitutional limits on Federal power. Furthermore, laws such as H.R. 556 are ineffective in eliminating the demand for vices such as Internet gambling; instead, they ensure that these enterprises will be controlled by organized crime. Therefore I urge my colleagues to reject H.R. 556, the Internet Gambling Prohibition Act.

RON PAUL.
